

Salary

Expenses only

Details

Open Europe is one of the leading independent think tanks carrying out cutting edge research on everything to do with reform of the EU: on subjects ranging from environmental policy to defence, from farming policy to the democratic deficit. We have offices in London and Brussels and make the case for free trade, free markets and the decentralisation of powers back to the member states.

We are looking for an intern to join the research team in Brussels from January 2011 on. You will work on short briefings for journalists, and longer pieces of public policy research. The role involves media monitoring, contact with journalists and original investigative research; these internships have occasionally led to full time positions in previous years.

You should have or expect to gain a master degree and must have very good English language skills and proficiency in several foreign languages. Applications from all subjects are welcome: a background in politics, history or economics is typical but not essential. Candidates with German and/or French are particularly encouraged to apply. Candidates must share Open Europe's objectives, and can expect to work in a robust but fun small team environment.

Closes

2 January 2011

Contact

Please send a CV and covering letter, explaining why you want to work for Open Europe, and a 200 words opinion statement on what you think is the best solution for the eurozone's problems to Pieter Cleppe at pieter@openeurope.org.uk

Website

<http://www.openeurope.org.uk>